Interviewer: If I remember correctly, you issued your invitation to tender last December. What's been going on since?

CEO: Well, the closing date for replies was exactly a week ago, March 31st that is. In those three months, 24 companies sent us their technical and cost proposals in the areas of computer reservation system services and Internet applications.

I: Twenty-four! Did you expect that many?

CEO: In fact, it's a lot more than we expected ...

I: Can you comment on the proposals at this stage?

CEO: All we can say at this point is that we are extremely pleased with the content and quality of all the proposals which we received. I repeat: all of them. So I assume you now have a tough task ahead?

CEO: A tough one indeed! We've now got to start the evaluation stage, as you might expect. We've already formed an Evaluation Committee, whose task will be to review all 24 proposals so they can analyse costs, seek functional demonstrations and meet key management staff of the companies that bid.

I: How long will that take?

CEO: We expect the whole process to take about two months.

I: And then?

CEO: If all goes well, we should be able to award contracts in the first half of June.

I: Thank you very much for these details. We're all looking forward to the decisions of the Evaluation Committee.
